Building the Getty Richard Meier, 1997 One of America's most eminent architects tells us what it was like to undertake the architectural commission of the century the building of the Getty Center in Los Angeles Writing with wit and passion and in engrossing detail Richard Meier takes us behind the scenes of the thirteen year long one billion dollar project We follow Meier from 1957 when just out of Cornell he traveled to Europe for a grand tour and to seek work with two of his architectural heroes Le Corbusier and Alvar Aalto and through to his early years in New York with Marcel Breuer After Meier established his own private practice we see him designing public housing and the private houses that expressed his distinctive modernist style of pure geometric line of whiteness and open spaces flooded with light We also see him in time designing such important art centers as the Museum of Decorative Arts in Frankfurt the High Museum of Art in Atlanta and the Museum of Contemporary Art in Barcelona And then in 1984 the Getty Center Meier tells us how he was selected from more than thirty architects after a lengthy and involved series of interviews to design the cultural campus on the spectacular 110 acre site overlooking the Santa Monica Mountains and the Pacific Ocean The Getty was a new cultural institution and Meier worked with the program directors to design the buildings that would serve them best In the beginning neither he nor the Getty had any idea of the complications in store for them Each of the Center's six components including the Getty Museum had its own set of priorities Meier faced two important contradictory challenges the creative and the practical His task was to design a series of buildings that would stand as architectural masterpieces But at the same time he had to deal with myriad specific demands and limitations imposed not only by his client but also by the local homeowners who were alarmed by the specter of a vast complex arising in their midst As a result the design process itself was not completed until 1991 when the drawings and large scale model of the Center were finally unveiled to the press But Meier's task had scarcely begun The sheer scale and complexity of the project and the number of people involved in every decision continued to mean constant revisions As construction moved ahead Meier lived on the site yet commuted to his New York office to manage ongoing European projects while in his new office in Los Angeles the population of architects handling the Getty grew to more than a hundred Although the Center's design had been agreed on much negotiation lay ahead before questions of material color and landscaping were at last settled Finally in 1996 almost half of the Center was ready to be occupied and Meier could see that the work carried out by the many architects engineers technicians craftsmen and builders for thirteen years was well on its way to being completed Meier's fascinating book chronicling the creation of one of the cultural monuments of our time is a unique record of the art and process of building in this century and an important contribution to architectural history

The Future of Museum and Gallery Design Suzanne MacLeod, Tricia Austin, Jonathan Hale, Oscar Ho Hing-Kay, 2018-06-18 The Future of Museum and Gallery Design explores new research and practice in museum design Placing a specific emphasis on social responsibility in its broadest sense the book emphasises the need for a greater understanding of the impact of museum design in the experiences of visitors in the manifestation of the vision and values of museums and galleries and in the shaping of civic spaces for culture in our shared social world The chapters included in the book propose a number of innovative approaches to museum design and museum design research Collectively contributors plead for more open and creative ways of making museums and ask that museums recognize design as a resource to be harnessed towards a form of museum making that is culturally located and makes a significant contribution to our personal social environmental and economic sustainability Such an approach demands new ways of conceptualizing museum and gallery design new ways of acknowledging the potential of design and new experimental and research led approaches to the shaping of cultural institutions internationally The Future of Museum and Gallery Design should be of great interest to academics and postgraduate students in the fields of museum studies gallery studies and heritage studies as well as architecture and design who are interested in understanding more about design as a resource in museums It should also be of great interest to museum and design practitioners and museum leaders
