

1 Compositing Two or More Photos

One of the most powerful aspects of digital compositing is the ability to combine two or more photographs into a single composite image. Although individual photographs can accomplish the same task, you have to take your camera into the scene in the composite, do work in two post-making, and you are not standing in the dark handling lenses from glass elements. In addition, you can see the result of your work in real time on the screen, whereas traditional work can only be assessed after the exposure is made and the film is put in a developer.

This is the most exciting work I do on the computer. There are no artistic boundaries, no restrictions of any kind to how we compose scenes. I can create forests, I can create water, I can create the Renaissance palace, or I can simply go off the deep end. With the ability to program and combine photographs of the stars in my collection can be created here. Now, instead of a beautiful landscape, a lovely scene, dirt, a compelling portrait, or dramatic wildlife study, I see scenes that a few moments with other pieces will give me a really original and unique image.

The beautiful interior of the Geneva International Airport is one of the first indoor shopping malls in the world. It was built in the nineteenth century in Milan, Italy. I photographed it with a Nikon lens, which is why there is a little vignette in the picture. It was shot with available light at twilight. The illumination was mercury vapor, which produced a blue-green cast on the picture. I then eliminated the blue-green color using Color Balance within Photoshop by setting magenta and yellow the components of blue and green.

I then opened the image of the model and removed her from her background with the Pen tool. The compositing of the architecture and the model was done in two stages. With the Magic Wand tool, I selected the young woman in Spain without including her garment. This selection was pasted into the image of the Galleria, sized with Layer Transform, scale, and positioned with the Move tool. I then selected only the white garment from the original studio garment and pasted it in place. At this point, the model and her garment are each separate layers. In the Layer palette, I adjusted the opacity of the garment layer to 80 percent until the architectural detail could be seen through the thin fabric.

With the Clone tool, I touched up any imperfections where the white fabric touched with the model's arms and legs. There were outside gaps in a few places that were easily eliminated.
