

GENERAL PHONETICS

PHONETICS & PHONOLOGY

For the purpose of communication language is used in two ways; speech and writing. Speech is considered to be primary and writing secondary. A systematic study of the spoken and written forms of the language is called linguistics. The human organs of speech are capable of producing a wide variety of sounds. From among them languages have selected their speech sounds. Phonetics is the study of these speech sounds. The branch of linguistics that deals with the spoken form of the language is known as phonetics. It studies the production, transmission and reception of the speech sounds. It is concerned with the physical properties of speech sounds or signs (phones): their physiological production, acoustic properties, auditory perception, and neurophysiological status.

The field of phonetics is a multi-layered subject of linguistics that focuses on speech. In the case of oral languages there are three basic areas of study:

- Articulatory phonetics: the study of the production of speech sounds by the articulatory and vocal tract by the speaker.
- Acoustic phonetics: the study of the physical transmission of speech sounds from the speaker to the listener.
- Auditory phonetics: the study of the reception and perception of speech sounds by the listener.

These areas are inter-connected through the common mechanism of sound, such as wavelength (pitch), amplitude, and harmonics.

By contrast phonology is the level at which linguists describe the sounds of a particular language. Bloomfield says, "Phonology is the organization of sounds into patterns." The selection and organisation of sounds in a particular language constitute the phonology of that language. Phonology is concerned with the abstract, grammatical characterization of systems of sounds or signs. It studies the way the speakers of a language systematically use a selection of the sounds in order to express meaning. Thus phonology deals with the distinctive sounds and their specific patterning in a particular language. Robins says "phonetics is general, descriptive and classificatory" while "phonology is particular and functional." Phonology, in fact, has been called functional phonetics.

Phonology basically involves the study of three things. a) Determining the distinctive or contrastive sounds (phonemes) in a language. b) Describing the changes when they occur in different relationships with other sounds. c) Establishing the various positions in which these sounds can occur in the words of a language.

Each language has its own phonological system. English RP has forty-four distinctive sounds while standard Malayalam has fifty-two. But the voiced palato-alveolar fricative / z / in English is absent in Malayalam. At the same time Malayalam has retroflex sounds like / t / and / n / which are absent in English. English permits combinations like / sk - / word-initially. But in Hindi they do not occur word-initially, without a vowel in between.

CARDINAL VOWELS

For the proper study of vowel sounds, we need a set of fixed vowel points as references. The vowel sounds specially selected for this purpose are called Cardinal Vowels. They are used as references to describe, classify and compare the vowels of any language. If we learn them we are learning about the range of vowels that human vocal organs can make.

There are different models of Cardinal Vowels. The most convenient and useful one is that system which was devised by Daniel Jones. Depending on the tongue height and the part of the tongue raised, Daniel Jones posited that eight vowels could be used as points of reference. The basis of this system is the two extreme positions that the tongue can adopt in the production of vowels. The area, which can be felt by the tongue at its highest and lowest levels and by its front and back positions, during the production of vowels, is called the cardinal vowel area. The tongue positions of all vowels will be within this boundary.

Vowel	symbol	Description
		part of the tongue raised	tongue height	lip-position
Cardinal Vowel No.1	i	front	close	unrounded
Cardinal Vowel No.2	e	front	half-close	unrounded
Cardinal Vowel No.3	ɛ	front	half-open	unrounded
Cardinal Vowel No.4	a	front	open	unrounded
Cardinal Vowel No.5	ɒ	back	open	unrounded
Cardinal Vowel No.6	ɔ	back	half-open	rounded
Cardinal Vowel No.7	o	back	half close	rounded
Cardinal Vowel No.8	u	back	close	rounded
