Expression of emotion in music and vocal communication Anjali Bhatara, Petri Laukka, Daniel J. Levitin, 2014-08-18 Two of the most important social skills in humans are the ability to determine the moods of those around us and to use this to guide our behavior To accomplish this we make use of numerous cues Among the most important are vocal cues from both speech and non speech sounds Music is also a reliable method for communicating emotion It is often present in social situations and can serve to unify a group's mood for ceremonial purposes funerals weddings or general social interactions Scientists and philosophers have speculated on the origins of music and language and the possible common bases of emotional expression through music speech and other vocalizations They have found increasing evidence of commonalities among them However the domains in which researchers investigate these topics do not always overlap or share a common language so communication between disciplines has been limited The aim of this Research Topic is to bring together research across multiple disciplines related to the production and perception of emotional cues in music speech and non verbal vocalizations This includes natural sounds produced by human and non human primates as well as synthesized sounds Research methodology includes survey behavioral and neuroimaging techniques investigating adults as well as developmental populations including those with atypical development Studies using laboratory tasks as well as studies in more naturalistic settings are included

Regional Policies and Comparative Advantage Bjørn Johansson, Charlie Karlsson, Roger Stough, 2002-01-01 This title analyzes the conception of economic development in modern regions which has gone through a fundamental change since the early 1980s Regions are today increasingly looked upon as independent market places that are connected via interregional and international trade and not as administrative units embodied in a national state Two complementary theoretical frameworks explain the specialization of economic activity at the regional level The traditional approach assumes that the comparative advantages of regions depend upon differences in the supply of lasting resources In contrast the newer complementary framework called the new economic geography assumes that the dynamic interaction between geographical market potentials and rational firms in its own way creates the comparative advantage of regions The book examines the policy implications of the complementarity of the competing views in a variety of geographic and functional contexts
