

Fortieth anniversary review of the CSIRO European Laboratory: does native range research provide good return on investment?

Summary

CSIRO established its first overseas research laboratory on biological control at Montpellier in late 1966 to start a programme on skeleton wood, Chondrilla juncea L. The laboratory was set up to develop the science to underpin effective biological control, by parallel studies in the native and introduced range of Australia's pests. Since establishment within a French research agency (CNRS), the facility moved in 1994 from rented facilities into a purpose-built CSIRO-owned facility, with support from Australian industry bodies and the French government. This facility has been CSIRO's largest long-term overseas investment in research. The core focus on biological control of weeds has been increasingly supplemented by other research activities that are not otherwise possible within Australia. We present an economic and scientific review of the laboratory on its 40th anniversary. The facility cost on average Aus$1.3 million (2006-05) per year (67% on direct research activities and 33% on infrastructure and administration) and generated at least 527 benefits for Australia for every $1 invested. Staff produced 279 publications of which 159 are in journals that are currently ISI rated (average citation rate in 2007 was 14.8 per ISI journal paper).

Keywords: biological control, cost/benefit, foreign exploration, historical review.

Introduction

Classical biological control aims to suppress invasive exotic pest populations by releasing specialist natural enemies, termed biocontrol agents, selected from the native range of the pest, while generating no or acceptably low non-target impacts (see Briese, 2000a). In this context, the native range of the target pest is the source of most biocontrol agents. These agents need to be found, identified, and any risks they may pose following introduction assessed by exposing them to native and commercially important species using a centrifugal phylogenetic approach (Wapshere, 1974; Briese, 2005) prior to importation into the invaded region. Countries, and their research agencies, around the world that practise classical biological control of exotic pests, tend to achieve this in one of three ways:

1. Scientific staff select potential biocontrol agents overseas during visits to the pest's native range and import them to a quarantine facility for detailed assessment. The Plant Protection Research Institute in South Africa has largely adopted this approach.
2. Contracted or collaborative research arrangements are set up with a research-provider agency to conduct the native range aspects of the research, including exploration and risk assessment. Agriculture Canada, certain US States, Landcare Research New Zealand, Queensland (Australia) and many developing countries have often adopted this approach with CABI as the dominant research provider.
 - a. Research agencies set up their own overseas research facilities in the native range of the pest so that they can manage the whole biological control programme and carry out risk assess-
