

What is Fire Ecology?

Fire ecology is the scientific study of fire's origins, behavior, and its impacts on ecosystems, including forest ecology and management. It explores how frequent fires, influenced by factors like moisture content and declines in fuel moisture, affect terrestrial ecosystems such as subalpine forests.

Understanding ecological responses and the effects of canopy midstory on wildfire behaviour is important for effective forest management, including canopy midstory management strategies. The forest service plays a key role in studying these dynamics and their implications for ecosystem health and resilience.
