

United States History

President Lincoln signs the Emancipation Proclamation, which declared that all slaves in the states still in rebellion against the Union would be freed. The Civil War had been fought to end slavery, but the Emancipation Proclamation did not free slaves in the states that had already joined the Confederacy.

After the Civil War, African Americans started their own schools and colleges. Many of these schools were founded by African Americans themselves. The most famous of these schools was Howard University, founded by the African American businessman and philanthropist George Washington Carver.

After the Civil War, African Americans began to move to cities in the North and West. This movement, known as the Great Migration, continued until the 1960s. African Americans moved to cities in the North and West to escape discrimination and segregation. They also sought better opportunities for education and employment.
